Citation Index

To use the Citation Index, look up the name of the first author of a work which you know to be relevant to your topic. Any of the author's works cited during the period covered by this issue of the SSCI® will appear in this index. You can use the names of the citing authors to enter the Source Index for descriptions of citing works. When the same reference has been cited by more than one source item, the source citations are arranged alphabetically by first author. Though only first authors are given in the Citation Index, all authors will be listed in the Source Index.

Preface

The Institute for Scientific Information® (ISI®) continued to pursue the development of new innovative electronic products in 1992. Our series of discipline-specific citation indexes on compact disc (CD-ROM) expanded with the launching of the Biomedical Engineering Citation Index™ (BECI™)[1] and the Materials Science Citation Index™ (MSCI™)[2] in June. These are in addition to the Biotechnology Citation Index™ (BCI™),[3] Chemistry Citation Index™ (CCI™)[4] and Neuroscience Citation Index™ (NSCI™)[3] which were introduced in 1991. These databases include searchable author abstracts, author-supplied keywords, ISI's unique KeyWords Plus® terms,[5] and Related Records® searching.[6]

In addition, searchable author abstracts were made available on new CD-ROM editions of the Science Citation Index® (SCI®) and Social Sciences Citation Index® (SSCI®).[7] The new SCI CDE with Abstracts and SSCI CDE with Abstracts also include author-supplied keywords and KeyWords Plus terms, and are updated monthly.

Another new electronic product launched in 1992 is the 10-year cumulation of the Arts & Humanities Citation Index® Compact Disc Edition (A&HCI® CDE). Covering the years 1980-1989, this new cumulation offers end users unparalleled access to scholarship in the arts and humanities. In addition, the annual A&HCI is also available on CD-ROM as well as the traditional print format.

Last but not least, ISI has also expanded its capabilities to meet the growing demand for citation-based analyses of research trends through its Contract Research Services.[8] These new applications of ISI data go beyond the traditional uses for current awareness and retrospective retrieval, providing a uniquely objective and quantitative perspective on the structure and dynamics of the research enterprise.

The Biomedical Engineering and Materials Science Citation Indexes on CD-ROM

ISI's decision to develop discipline-specific citation indexes was based on our mission to provide state-of-the-art information management tools for the end user. Although most universities receive the SCI in the main libraries, it is not widely available at the department or laboratory level in academic, corporate, and government institutions. Producing citation indexes on CD-ROM for high-growth research areas — biomedical engineering, biotechnology, chemistry, materials science, and neuroscience — enables the individual researcher and administrator to have direct, comprehensive, and current access to the specialty literature in their offices and laboratories.

The new Biomedical Engineering Citation Index provides full coverage of more than 100 core journals, plus selective coverage of more than 7,000 journals in ISI's databases. Some 30,000 articles are covered annually in many subspecialties — artificial limbs and prostheses; implantable organs and devices; surgical tools and rehabilitation equipment; treatment and imaging techniques and devices; biomaterials and biosensors; computer applications in medicine, including medical informatics; etc.

The new Materials Science Citation Index offers complete bibliographic information on some 80,000 to 90,000 articles annually from 450 fully covered core journals as well as selectively indexed journals in the larger ISI database. Subject areas include metals, ceramics, composites, and polymers and their applications in electronics, optics, construction, dentistry and medicine, energy production, etc.

As with all of ISI's specialty citation indexes on CD-ROM, these new products offer our unique and exclusive citation-based searching features — KeyWords Plus and Related Records. KeyWords Plus derives additional search terms for source articles from the most-frequently occurring words and phrases appearing in the titles of references they cite. Related Records is based on the principle of bibliographic coupling, and links articles that share one or more cited references in common. In addition, the specialty CD-ROM citation indexes also offer fully searchable author abstracts and author-supplied keywords.

All of the discipline-specific citation indexes on CD-ROM are updated bimonthly with subsequent issues cumulating the data for the year.

The SCI and SSCI Compact Disc Edition with Abstracts

The addition of abstracts to the Science Citation Index has been discussed from its inception in 1964. But since the SCI and Current Contents® were generated from the same production system, adding abstracts would have delayed the processing — and timeliness — of our products with the technology available at the time. However, recent advances in input scanning processing systems enabled us to add abstracts to ISI's database without sacrificing timeliness.

Thus, in 1992 we launched CD-ROM editions of the SCI and SSCI with searchable author abstracts. The availability of abstracts significantly increases the number of descriptors to characterize a paper and make it more retrievable. They also help the end user determine whether it is worth the time and expense to obtain copies or reprints. The potential yield of useful information in searching these new products is further enhanced with the inclusion of KeyWords Plus terms and author-supplied keywords, as well as Related Records searching.

The new SCI and SSCI CDE with Abstracts are updated monthly with subsequent issues cumulating the data for the year. The SCI edition is issued on two discs because of the volume of information it contains. Users will therefore need two CD drives to search the database. The SSCI edition is issued on one disc.

The Arts & Humanities Citation Index® Compact Disc Edition 1980-89 Cumulation

The new A&HCI® CDE ten-year cumulation provides easy, flexible, and rapid electronic access to more than 1,100,000 source articles and the 7,500,000 references they cited. The fully-indexed articles are drawn from more than 1,100 core journals covering a broad range of disciplines from archaeology to theater. In addition, selective coverage of relevant items from all 7,000 journals in our databases is provided.

The database can be searched by a variety of "fields" — all author names, article title words, full or abbreviated journal titles, all author addresses, and cited references. Searches can also be limited by language, type of document, and publication year. Boolean logic operators allow the end user to combine and refine search results, and searches can be saved and run automatically later as custom profiles.

In a forthcoming essay I will be rhapsodizing on the remarkable results obtained in using Related Records® for searching the A&HCI CDE. This is the first time that Related Records searching is available over a ten-year span. Five-year spans were previously covered in the SSCI® CDE cumulations for 1981-1985 and 1986-1990.

The comprehensive coverage and electronic access offered by the A&HCI CDE ten-year cumulation make it a uniquely effective resource for searching the arts and humanities literature. No other source provides as many flexible options to explore an entire decade of scholarship in this field.

ISI®'s Contract Research Services

ISI's data have increasingly been used as quantitative indicators by science policymakers, administrators, analysts, and other professionals in government, academia, and industry. To meet this growing need, we have developed a range of contract research services for customized data extractions and quantitative analyses. These services are based on several proprietary in-house databases.

The Science Indicators Database contains complete bibliographic information on all ISI-indexed articles from 1981 to the present, including both total and year-by-year citation counts for each item. The Research Front Database uses co-citation clustering to identify over 8,000 active research specialties each year. The SCI-MAP Microcomputer System graphically depicts co-citation relationships among journals, articles, authors, and specialty areas. And the Hot Papers Database tracks articles published in the last few years that have attracted significantly more citations than other papers in the same field and of the same age.

These databases enable a variety of sophisticated, objective, and quantitative analyses of research trends and performance rankings at various levels: individual researchers, departments and laboratories, institutions, cities and nations and regions, subspecialties and fields, etc. Comparisons on a number of indicators can be made: productivity, citation frequency, average citation impact, proportion of cited versus uncited papers, self-citation rate, and so on. The analyses can cover single time periods or multiple time series.

The new products and services introduced in 1992 demonstrate ISI's continuing commitment to maintain its innovative leadership in the information industry. The following pages contain detailed information on how to use ISI's citation indexes. Additional information is available from our Customer Service Department, including instructional materials, slide sets, reprints, and posters explaining how best to use ISI's products and conduct effective information searches.

SOCIAL SCIENCES CITATION INDEX®

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The SSCI® is a calendar-year index made up of the Citation Index, Source Index, Permuterm® Subject Index and the Corporate Index. The triannuals and the annual cover over 4,700 journals; approximately 1,400 of these are fully covered and 3,300 are selectively covered. A limited number of monographic series are also indexed. Virtually every discipline in the social sciences is represented:

anthropology archaeology area studies
business & finance communication community health criminology & penology demography economics educational research environmental studies ergonomics
ethnic group studies family studies geography
geriatrics & gerontology health policy history
information & library sciences international relations law linguistics management marketing nursing personal management philosophy political science psychiatry psychology sociology statistics substance abuse
urban planning & development
women's studies

With minor exceptions, each issue of SSCI indexes all issues of journals published and available during the time period covered. Each fully covered journal receives comprehensive treatment, eliminating doubt as to whether a particular journal article was indexed. All possible useful items, including proceedings, editorials, letters, meeting reports, book reviews, etc. are processed. Only ephemeral items such as advertisements and news notices are omitted.

In addition to the fully covered journals, individual articles from the Science Citation Index® data base are selected for inclusion. The selection procedure begins automatically during computer processing using citation patterns of the articles as well as keywords appearing in the article titles as the criteria for selection. These article titles are then examined manually by an editor (subject specialist) who determines whether or not the article will be included in SSCI. The 3,300 selectively covered journals include many from the natural, physical, and biomedical sciences, which are often excellent sources of important articles on the social sciences. The Lists of Source Publications appearing in this introduction do not include all 3,300 selectively covered journals, but only those that have actually produced relevant items during the time period indexed.

The SSCI also indexes a selected number of monographic series, which are processed in the same manner as journals. Each chapter is indexed as an article, and appears in the Source Index under the author's name. Series titles are integrated with journal titles in the Lists of Source Publications in this volume.

Because SSCI gives you in-depth, multi-disciplinary coverage of the social sciences literature, there's no need to use several discipline-oriented indexes to achieve truly comprehensive searches. SSCI lets you start and finish a search with one reference tool.

UNDERTAKING A SEARCH IN THE SSCI

Using the Social Sciences Citation Index is a relatively simple affair. In a citation index the subject of a search is symbolized by the starting reference rather than a word or subject heading. Searching, consequently, is independent of special nomenclatures or artificial languages. The searcher starts with a reference or an author he has identified through a footnote, book, encyclopedia or conventional word or subject index. He then enters the Citation Index section of the Social Sciences Citation Index and searches for that particular author's name. When he locates the author's name, he then checks to see which of several possible references fits the particular one that he is interested in. Under the year, journal, volume and page number of this particular reference, he then looks to see who has currently cited this particular work. Having noted the bibliographic citations of the authors who are citing the work with which he started, the searcher then turns to the Source Index section and obtains the complete bibliographic data for the works which he has found.

If the searcher wants to identify papers which originated at a particular organization or geographic location, he can enter the Source Index through the Corporate Index.

Citation indexing is highly specific, but a search may also be readily expanded in order to build a more extensive bibliography for a particular inquiry. For example, having found a number of source items, the searcher can use the bibliographies of one or several of these as other entries into the Citation Index. This process is called "cycling." Since authors frequently write more than one closely related paper, additional publications by the author of the first starting reference can also be used as entry points, and citations to these works can be examined to obtain additional information. The Source Index itself may yield relevant current publications by a given author, even though they may not cite any of the known starting references.

The fundamental question one can answer quickly through the Citation Index is where and by whom has this paper been cited in the literature? The SSCI® is also used by scientists to determine whether their work has been applied or criticized by others. It can facilitate feedbacks in the communication cycle. Any author may choose to ignore the citations to his own work and still use the Index to retrieve publications which cite works by other social scientists. The SSCI can be used to identify researchers currently working on special problems or to determine whether a paper has been cited, whether there has been a review of a subject, whether a concept has been applied, a theory confirmed, or a method improved. Because indications of corrections are published in the SSCI, it is useful as an aid in following particular articles. Only the user's imagination limits the extent to which the SSCI can be a useful tool for the scientist and librarian. Questions that the SSCI can answer are:

- Has this paper been cited?
- Has there been a review on this subject?
- Has this theory been confirmed?
- Has this work been extended?
- Has this method been improved?
- Has this suggestion been tried?
- Is this idea really original?
- Was this "to-be-published" paper published and where?
- Where is the full paper for this preliminary communication?
- Has this technical report been published in a journal?
- Have subsequent errata and correction notes been published?
- Where are the data for an introduction to this paper?
- Where are the raw data for a review article on this subject?
- Is there sufficient new information to warrant updating a chapter in a book?
- What are the raw data for an analytical historical network diagram?
- Who else is working in this field?
- Are there data to delineate this field of study?
- What are some potential new markets for this product?
- Has this theory or concept been applied to a new field?
- What published work originated from this organization?
- Has this article been abstracted in primary journals?
- What are all the current works in which this person is primary author?
- What are all the current works in which this person is secondary author?
- What other works has this person written?
- Have this person's works been compiled?

Relevance of information obtained through use of citation indexes, and the SSCI in particular, is generally very high. A citation does not suffer from failure to include descriptive terminology—rather it is a brief representation of the content of the documents it identifies. Those who have studied citation indexes know that only a small number of reference citations is needed to isolate a particular document from all others in a collection.

Irrelevance or "noise" can be eliminated in using citation indexes by careful selection of references as access points. In particular, if narrow specificity is desired in a search, the starting reference should be one which deals with only one subject. Another method of reducing "noise" is to apply the concept of bibliographic coupling to the search. This involves recording sources obtained from the index which have two or more starting references in common.

Citation indexing has advantages that conventional indexing systems do not supply. A major advantage is the fact that there is no need to guess how an indexer might have indexed a particular item. Multidisciplinary coverage is another distinct benefit afforded by citation indexes such as SSCI. Of importance too, are the speed and convenience which citation indexing provides to the searcher.

Guidelines for Interpretation of ISI® Citation Data

Initial Considerations

ISI's unique indexes provide multidisciplinary coverage of the international journal literature and offer a variety of access points to these data. Each journal issue is indexed cover-to-cover, including all cited references (citations). ISI's data unification process can result in a more accurate presentation of the citation data than presented in the original journal literature. However, the information derivable from our files and products should always be considered as supplementary to other data useful in evaluative studies. Citation analysis should never be used as a mechanical replacement for careful human judgment.

Even for statistical studies, where individual citation errors may not be significant, you should be aware of the points outlined here. There are many factors outside ISI's control which can cause problems in interpreting citation data, especially if you are using data to obtain impressions about individuals.

To obtain complete information on a particular author, begin your search with the author's full bibliography. This ensures that you will find citations to all papers, including those where he/she was a secondary author. A full bibliography also helps you distinguish the author's works from the works of other authors with similar names (see Authors' Names below). Remember that it is not unusual for a single publication to cite several papers or books by the same author; therefore, you may want to distinguish between total citations and total citations by unique citing publications.

Primary and Secondary Authorship

Source items can be easily located for Secondary Authors in our indexes since we provide cross-references to the Primary Authors. Secondary Authors are also listed under the main article entry. Since we process only the primary author of a cited work, citations are retrievable only under the primary author in the Citation Index. Cross-references to primary authors' names are not included in the Citation Index.

Authors' Names—Variations in Listings

More than one author listed under a single name heading (homographs).
Both with source and citation name information, it is possible that more than one author's work is presented under a single name heading (last name followed by initials). For source data it may be easy to distinguish two people by the given address or field of study. Such a distinction is more difficult to make in the Citation Index, because the only differentiating factor available is journal title.

One author listed under multiple headings.
It is possible for an author's works to be divided and listed under more than one name heading.

a. The name might be cited incorrectly or with variant initials.
b. A married female author could be listed under both maiden and married name.
c. Authors with compound names could be listed under one or both of the names.
d. Authors with particle names (De, Des, Von, Van, etc.) are most vulnerable and should be looked up under all possible initial variants for an exhaustive search.

For example, R. De Levie should be looked up under:

DELEVIE D	LEVIE DR
DELEVIE R	LEVIE R
DELEVIE RD	LEVIE RD
LEVIE D

Chinese and Hungarian Names.
Chinese or Hungarian names are usually presented as last, first and middle name, in Chinese and Hungarian publications. Some journals will flip the names to the English format of first, middle, last.

In other journals, the first and middle names are joined with a hyphen, and the last name can appear either before or after the hyphenated pair. Our general rule for keying is that the last name appears first when no hyphenation is used, and that when hyphens are present, the last name is the unhyphenated term.

For example, the Chinese name Shi Ya Wen may be presented in the journal as:

Shi Ya Wen
Shi Ya-Wen
Ya-Wen Shi

It should therefore be looked up under:

SHI YW
WEN SY

The Hungarian name Uzonyi Kiss Sandor may be presented in the journal as:

Uzonyi Kiss Sandor
Sandor Uzonyi Kiss

It should therefore be looked up under:

UZONYI KS
SANDOR UK
KISS SU

Translated and Transliterated Names.
When the journals provide transliteration of authors' names, we key that version, otherwise we provide our own transliteration. There are many different ways a single character can be transliterated—for example, the Russian y can be presented as ii, i, iy, ij, j, etc. Every journal has its own policy, as do we.

Another aspect of this principle is transliteration in multiple steps, whereby, for example, a Chinese name is modified for the Cyrillic alphabet and then again to the Roman alphabet.

Illustration:

石亜文	Chinese (pinyin: Shi Ya Wen)
ШЫР Я ВЭН	Cyrillic (one of several possibilities)
SHYR YA VEN	Roman (one of several possibilities)

thus adding at least two new variants to be looked up:

SHI YV VEN SY

Cited Journal Data—Variations in Listings

ISI does its best to unify variations in the cited journal, volume, page, and year fields, but there are many variations that cannot be unified. In some cases, a comprehensive search requires that you scan neighboring lines for variant references to the same item.

Further Considerations in the Evaluative Process

The most common variations in citation data are discussed above. However, a more accurate evaluation must include further considerations, such as:

a. The number of authors affiliated with the cited article
b. The reasons for citation
c. The chronological distribution of the cited articles
d. The citation count distribution
e. Self-citations
f. Cross-disciplinary citations
g. Cross-national or cross-language citations
h. Article half-life citation curves
i. Journal quality
j. Number of uncited articles
k. Size of subject field and citations to it
l. The number of unique citing articles is not equal to the number of citations. Co-citation is common.

CITATION INDEX

Authored Citations. The Citation Index provides indexing entries to the current literature by means of the ordered listing of all items cited during a current year. It is arranged alphabetically by cited author and within this arrangement chronologically by cited year. A citation to a reference contains the cited author's name and initials, the reference year, the publication name, volume, and page number. Under each cited item appear the source articles citing this work. This line is arranged by citing author's name, publication, single-letter code identifying type of source item (letter, editorial, etc.), volume, page, and citing year. Only the first author for both the cited and citing articles is given in the Citation Index. While reference years may be any year in recorded history, the source year is usually the current year.

Corporate Author. The Corporate Author Citation Index immediately follows the Citation Index. In it may be found cited items which did not contain a personal author, listed by the name of the publishing organization or issuing agency, and then by the document title and/or number. Generally accepted abbreviations and acronyms are used whenever possible for the names of organizations (e.g., US DEP HEW, NAT SCI F). Corporately authored cited items include biblical references, contracts, reports, bulletins, books and meetings. Publications from every level of the United States and foreign governments will be found here under the name of the issuing or sponsoring agency. The form of the source citation is the same as in the Citation Index.

Anonymous Citations. Cited anonymous works follow the Corporate Author Citation Index, and are arranged by journal title abbreviation, and then chronologically. Within each year, cited items are arranged in order of volume and page. Citing items are arranged alphabetically by citing author. A unique abbreviation of a cited publication appears only once, at the head of the list of reference citations. In the case of newspapers, magazines and other media with ambiguous volume and page data, the month and day of publication are given in the right-hand portion of the cited journal field (e.g., NY TIMES 0814 refers to the August 14 issue. The year will appear following the volume and page fields). The form of the reference citation is: cited publication, volume, page, year. The form of the source citation is the same as in the Citation Index.

PROCESSING CONVENTIONS

Authors. Every cited item from the text, footnotes, or bibliography of a source item is processed for the Citation Index. Only the name of the first author of these cited items is processed for Citation Index. A maximum of 15 characters is allowed for the last name of cited authors; when the cited author's last name has more than 15 characters, the name is truncated by a period following the fifteenth letter of the name. A maximum of 8 characters is allowed for the names of citing authors; longer names are truncated by a period after the eighth letter of the name. Two initials are allowed when names are truncated.

Cited Reference Year. For 20th century references the two terminal digits are the first item of the cited reference line. For previous centuries the entire year is given. Two asterisks () are used in place of the cited reference year digits in the case of undated items.

Cited Reference Titles. Cited references may be published or unpublished items. Cited published items may be journals, books, theses, reports of various kinds, proceedings of meetings and congresses, etc. Unpublished cited items may be personal correspondence, studies or observations, internal communications, papers awaiting publication, etc. Hyphens and apostrophes are dropped and the elements which they separated are fused. Easily understood abbreviations, many of them of one letter, are used for words which occur frequently in the titles of reference publications. For example, T is used for Transactions, C for Congress, P for Proceedings. Spelled out numbers, both cardinal and ordinal, are generally converted to their Arabic equivalents.

Twenty characters are allowed for the title of a reference publication. Additional data necessary to identify a journal reference (e.g., section, class, series, part or supplement) are supplied. These elements (usually numbers, letters, or combinations of the two) appear at the end of the reference journal column. A supplement number is preceded by an S. If more than one of these elements is present, they appear in the reference journal column reading from left to right in this order: series, part, supplement, class. An acronym is created consisting of the first letters of the words describing a series.

Additional Citations. In the SSCI® annual cumulation, if a particular cited item has also been cited in ISI®'s Science Citation Index®, there will be a note informing the user of this. The note will appear directly under the cited item and before any citing items; it reads SEE SCI for n ADDITIONAL CITATIONS.

Cited Non-Journal Abbreviations. When the titles of non-journal publications include numbers, or numbers combined with letters, the numbers or numbers and letters are brought to the front of the title field, and the rest of the title is systematically abbreviated by truncating each word, as far as space permits, before the second independent vowel. Thus "R. Lechner, Harvard Computational Laboratory, Cambridge, Mass., Progress Report BL-30, 1961." would be abbreviated "LECHNER R, 61 BL30 HARV COMP LAB P."

Journal References. In journal references, the volume number takes precedence over issue number and appears immediately after the title abbreviation. An alphabetic character associated with a page number is placed in front of it; thus page 4A will appear as A4. Roman numerals are converted to their Arabic equivalent preceded by the letter R; thus, xiii becomes R13. When, in references to books, a chapter is cited rather than a page, the chapter number preceded by CH is given in the page-number column.

Unification of Cited Journal Titles. Any reference may be cited in different ways; there is a particularly wide variation in the use of abbreviations for journal titles. In compiling the SSCI, an attempt is made to identify different variations of the same citation by a computerized 'unification' of cited references. In most cases the common 'unified' reference will be listed only once, followed by the citations for the citing articles.

Citation Index

To use the Citation Index, look up the name of the first author of a work which you know to be relevant to your topic. Any of the author's works cited during the period covered by this issue of the SSCI® will appear in this index. You can use the names of the citing authors to enter the Source Index for descriptions of citing works. When the same reference has been cited by more than one source item, the source citations are arranged alphabetically by first author. Though only first authors are given in the Citation Index, all authors will be listed in the Source Index.

CONVENTIONS USED IN THE CITATION INDEX

AUTHORS' NAMES

The elements of compound names are fused; hyphens in compound names are dropped before fusing. Thus, J. Smith-Wright appears as SMITHWRIGHT J.

Particles in proper names (van, Von, de, La, Di, etc.) are fused to the last name. Janice de Gambi, for instance, appears as DEGAMBI J. The exception to this rule is any compound Spanish or Portuguese surname containing the conjunction "y" or "e". These conjunctions are not fused; thus, Jose Impanema y Moriera appears as MORIERA JIY.

Names with a religious title are provided with an arbitrary X which appears as a second initial following the initial of the author's religious title. Thus, Sister Mary Theresa would appear as MARYTHERESA SX; Mother Joseph Martyr would appear as JOSEPHMARTYR MX. Citing authors' names would be truncated at eight characters in Citation Index entries.

Russian names (both cited and citing author names) appear in transliterated form. When indexing Russian names that are transliterated, ISI® generally accepts the transliteration provided by the journal. When no transliteration is provided by the journal, ISI transliterates the name following the system of the British Standards Institute. Searchers should be sure to check for possible variations in transliteration when conducting searches involving Russian language names.

In the Corporate Author Citation Index, corporate acronyms are used to describe organizations and agencies.

Certain words in other organization and agency names may also be abbreviated. A list of acronyms and abbreviations appears in the Introduction.

REFERENCE PUBLICATION

When the reference publication is designated numerically, such as a technical report or numbered meeting, the identifying number or acronym number combination is presented first, and the rest of the information systematically abbreviated. This abbreviation consists of truncating each word just short of the second vowel group.

VOLUME AND PAGE

Note that whenever letters are presented with volume or page numbers the alphabetical information always precedes the numbers. In the source page field:

- S signifies supplement.
- U signifies unnumbered page and the nearest numbered page is indicated.
- R indicates a Roman numeral page converted here to Arabic numerals.

TYPE OF SOURCE ITEM

Each citing item in the Citation Index is categorized by an arbitrary single-letter code appearing immediately after the source journal. Since they are the most frequent, a Blank code is given for those source items which are the usual type of original article, report or paper. The codes for other types of sources are:

- B Book Review—A critical analysis of a book.
- C Correction—The published correction of an error or omission from a paper that was previously published; includes addenda, errata, corrigenda.

D Discussion—The published account of the discussion portion of a conference program; includes discussion between individuals, post-paper discussions, round table symposia, clinical conferences, etc.

E Editorial—Covers editorials and editorial-like items. These items typically contain opinions of a person, group, or organization. This code also includes interviews.

I Biographical Item—An article focusing on the life of an individual, or a tribute to or commemoration of an individual; includes awards, biographies, obituaries, etc.

K Chronology—A list of events in the sequence in which they occurred.

L Letter—Contributions or correspondence from the readers to the journal editor concerning previously published material.

M Meeting Abstract—A general summation of completed papers that were or will be presented at a symposium or conference, typically less than one page of text.

N Note—A technical comment shorter than an article and restricted in scope; a brief article designated as such by the journal.

R Reviews—Includes review articles and surveys of previously published literature. All items from review journals are coded R, as are most papers with more than 100 references.

RP Reprint—Includes articles published previously in other journals.

W Computer Reviews—Includes critical analyses of online databases, systems software and applications programs, computer hardware, peripherals and computer-associated equipment. In the Source Index, computer reviews are further classified into three distinct categories: Database Reviews, Software Reviews, and Hardware Reviews.

Corporate Index

The Corporate Index consists of two sections—Geographic and Organization. In the Geographic section, current source items are arranged alphabetically by the location (country and city) of the author's organization. For the United States the names of states are given instead of the country. States of the U.S. appear in one alphabetic listing, followed by a separate list of all other nations, arranged by the name of the country. Below each city name are the organizations located in that city which are listed by current source authors. Subdivisions of organizations are listed in descending order of magnitude, e.g., university, college, department, laboratory.

Under each organization entry, the name of the first author is listed with the journal title abbreviation, volume, page, and year of the source article published. Full bibliographic information for each article is listed under the first author's name in the Source Index. In the Corporate Index, authors' names are truncated at eight characters. This is indicated by a period in the ninth space. When a name is truncated, only two initials can appear. Otherwise, up to three are given.

If the searcher does not know the geographic location of an organization, the Organization section is an alphabetic list of all organizations listing current source authors, and the geographic location of each organization. A number of standard ISI® abbreviations are used for names of geographic locations and institutions in the Corporate Index. A list of these acronyms and abbreviations appears in the Introduction.

SOURCE INDEX

Authored Items. The Source Index is an author index to every item covered in SSCI®. Source items are arranged in alphabetical order by first author. Co-authors' names are cross-referenced to first author's entries.

Anonymous Items. Anonymous and corporately authored source items appear at the beginning of the Source Index and are listed alphabetically by journal title abbreviation and within journal title by issue.

Entry Format. Each entry in the Source Index gives a bibliographic description of the item. For entries from journals, the Source Index shows all authors, full title of the item, type of item, journal title, volume, issue, pages, year of publication—and the first author's address when provided by the journal. The SSCI also indexes a selected number of monographic series, which are processed in the same manner as journals. For these entries, each chapter is indexed as an article, and appears in the Source Index under the author's name. Series titles are integrated with journal titles in the Lists of Source Publications.

PROCESSING CONVENTIONS

Authors. An author's name will appear only once although it may correspond to more than one author. All items related to that name will appear under it.

The names of secondary authors are cross-referenced to the first author by a ''see'' reference. This reference includes not only the name of the first author but also the citation of the source item (journal title abbreviation, volume, page, year). While every secondary author is listed with a see reference, only the first nine will be listed as co-authors under the primary author entry.

All authors' surnames appear in full except in two cases: secondary authors' names listed after primary authors, and primary authors' names cross-referenced in secondary author entries are truncated after eight characters. This is indicated by a period in the ninth space. When a name is truncated, only two initials can appear, otherwise, up to three can appear.

The elements of compound names are fused; hyphens in compound names are dropped before fusing. Thus, J. Smith-Wright appears as SMITHWRIGHT J.

Particles in proper names (van, von, de, La, Di, etc.) are fused to the last name. Janice de Gambi, for instance, appears as DEGAMBI J. The exception to this rule is any compound Spanish or Portuguese surname containing the conjunction ''y'' or ''e''. These conjunctions are not fused; thus, Jose Impanema y Moriera appears as MORIERA JIY.

Names with a religious title are provided with an arbitrary X which appears as a second initial following the initial of the author's religious title. Thus, Sister Mary Theresa would appear as MARYTHERESA SX; Mother Joseph Martyr would appear as JOSEPHMARTYR MX.

Russian source author names appear in transliterated form. When indexing Russian names that are transliterated, ISI® generally accepts the transliteration provided by the journal. When no transliteration is provided by the journal, ISI transliterates the name following the system of the British Standards Institute. Searchers should be sure to check for possible variations in transliteration when conducting searches involving Russian language names.

Book Reviews. In the case of Book Reviews the reviewer is listed as the primary author of the article. The language code preceding the title refers to the language of the review. If the book is not in English, the title is translated into English and is followed by a spelled-out indication of the language of the book. The name of the author of the book is included at the end of the title or following the language indicator, if present. If a book review has only one reference, that reference is not printed in the Source Index, but it does appear in the Citation Index.

In the issue field (parentheses) an 'S' indicates an irregular supplement number.

References. The number of references provided by the source item in the reference count field may not equal the number of listed references in some cases. This occurs when the same reference is cited more than once by the source item. Duplicate references are eliminated from the listed references for a source item but are, however, reflected in the reference count which follows the source journal volume page and year. In addition, citations in bibliographies are not listed. You will see "•R" in the "Number of Citations" field when looking at bibliographies in the Source Index.

Selectively Covered Journals. In addition to covering the journals in its own data base, the SSCI® provides coverage of certain journal items from the Science Citation Index® (SCI®) data base which meet ISI®'s criteria for inclusion in the SSCI. A black box (■) to the left of the title indicates these items in the Source Index; however, they are not differentiated when they appear in the Citation Index or Permuterm® Subject Index of the SSCI.

Journal Title Abbreviations. The title of each source journal is abbreviated in the same way throughout the SSCI. These abbreviations are limited to eleven characters (including spaces), and eliminate all diacritical marks, punctuation, etc. Nevertheless, care has been taken to make them as meaningful as possible. A list of abbreviations and full titles is given in this volume.

Journal Accession Number. To the right of the number of references, you will see an accession number consisting of two letters and three numbers. Articles appearing in the Source Index can be ordered through ISI's The Genuine Article® Service. Refer to the accession number when ordering.

Supplements. In see-references, irregular supplements are indicated by an S in front of the volume number of the journal. The number of the supplement itself can be found under the appropriate first-author entry. Letters associated with volume and page numbers appear in front of them.

Titles. In transcribing titles of items for the Source Index, certain conventions are used. Diacritical marks are ignored. All punctuation marks used to indicate a break between parts of a title are replaced by a dash, with the exception of commas and ellipses. When a numeral is used to indicate a subtitle of a series, the numeral is retained, preceded and followed by a period.

Roman numerals are replaced by their Arabic equivalents. Spelled out cardinals and ordinals are replaced by Arabic numbers, with the exception of "one" and "zero." Greek letters, whether standing alone or in technical notation, are spelled out.

All other punctuation, except when used in technical notation, is dropped. When processing technical notations, these conventions are adopted:

–	Minus sign, hyphen, dash or colon
=	Equal sign, double, triple bonds, etc., e.g., HC≡ CH becomes HC= CH
BAR	Super bar, e.g., K becomes KBAR
DEGREES	Degree symbol, e.g., 32°C becomes 32 DEGREES C.
A–4	A minus 4, or A_{-4}
A4	A4, or A_4 or A^4
CU65(P,PN)	Superscript terms, e.g., Cu^{65}(p,pn)
CU64	Cu^{64}
BETAN	Subscript terms, e.g., βn
Na-40(23)	Super- and subscript terms, e.g., NA^{23}_{40}

ISI® source item code. Each source item in the SSCI® is categorized and certain items are assigned codes. In the Citation Index this code appears in the form of a single letter after the citing journal title abbreviation. In the Source Index, this code is expanded to a term to make the meaning clearer and more quickly understood. These terms appear only in primary author entries in the Source Index, immediately following the article title.

The usual type of original article, report, or paper receives no code (a blank). Here are the terms for other types of Source Index entry (the letters in parentheses are the codes as they appear with source items in the Citation Index):

BIBLIOGRAPHY (BI)—A bibliography on a given subject, often accompanied by descriptive or critical notes on each paper listed.

BIOGRAPHICAL ITEM (I)—An article focusing on the life of an individual, or a tribute to or commemoration of an individual; includes awards, biographies, obituaries, etc.

BOOK REVIEW (B)—A critical analysis of a book.

CHRONOLOGY (K)—A list of events in the sequence in which they occurred.

CORRECTION (C)—The published correction of an error or omission from a paper that was previously published; includes addenda, errata, corrigenda.

DATABASE REVIEW (W)—Includes critical reviews of online databases.

DISCUSSION (D)—The published account of the discussion portion of a conference program; includes discussions between individuals, post-paper discussions, round table symposia, clinical conferences, etc.

EDITORIAL (E)—Covers editorials and editorial-like items. These items typically contain opinions of a person, group, or organization. This code also includes interviews.

HARDWARE REVIEW (W)—Includes critical reviews of computers, peripherals, and computer-associated equipment.

LETTER (L)—Contributions or correspondence from the readers to the journal editor concerning previously published material.

MEETING ABSTRACT (M)—A general summation of completed papers that were or will be presented at a symposium or conference, typically less than one page of text.

NOTE (N)—A technical comment shorter than an article and restricted in scope; a brief article designated as such by the journal.

REPRINT (RP)—Includes articles published previously in other journals.

REVIEWS (R)—Includes review articles and surveys of previously published literature. All items from review journals are coded R, as are most papers with more than 100 references.

SOFTWARE REVIEW (W)—Includes critical reviews of systems software and applications programs.

PERMUTERM® SUBJECT INDEX

The Permuterm Subject Index (PSI) is a permuted title-word index to the source items processed for the Social Sciences Citation Index®. In PSI, every significant title word is paired with every other significant word in the same title. PSI is, thus, a "natural language" indexing system, based on the language used by authors in contrast to that used by indexers. As such, PSI has many advantages. If the reader recalls the title of a publication but not its author, a natural language index enables him to determine easily the complete bibliographic identification of the work. For a partially remembered title, one or two words will also help retrieve the full title. When no specific title is sought, the search terms with which the scientist conceptualizes his problem are more likely to coincide with those currently used by other authors in his field, than with subject heading entries in conventional indexes which are updated infrequently.

PROCESSING CONVENTIONS

Arrangement. Since every significant word in the title of an item is paired with every other significant word, one of these words becomes a primary term, the other a co-term listed under the primary term. The PSI is arranged alphabetically by primary terms (items beginning with numbers follow the alphabetic entries). All co-terms are listed alphabetically under each primary term. Thus, with the exceptions noted below under "Semi-Stop Words", all co-terms appear in the permuted alphabetic listing as primary terms. Subtitles are also included in the PSI but are permuted separately from the main titles in which they appear.

Opposite each co-term is the name of the author of an item whose title includes the words represented by the pair of primary and co-terms. A complete bibliographic description can be located by looking up the author's name in the Source Index.

Word Definition. A word or term is defined as a sequence of one or more characters preceded and followed by blank spaces. Parentheses and brackets at the beginning or end of such a sequence of characters are removed in construction of the index, but parentheses or brackets occurring within the sequence of characters are retained.

Titles are examined by editors before data entry. Certain minor changes are made to improve the title words as search terms for PSI. Greek letters and other special symbols are spelled out. Place names and genus-species names are hyphenated. Isotopes always appear with the number following and hyphenated to the word or symbol, for example: STRONTIUM-90 and SR-90.

Word Length. Primary terms are limited to 18 characters. When a primary term exceeds 18 characters, the word is truncated, and truncation is indicated by a period in place of the eighteenth character. Thus, the primary term BEHAVIOR-MODIFICATION is truncated to BEHAVIOR-MODIFICA. Co-terms are limited to 11 characters. When they exceed 11 characters they are similarly truncated, and truncation indicated by a period in place of the eleventh character. Thus, the co-term, PSYCHOSOMATIC is truncated to PSYCHOSOMA.

Full-Stop Words. Full-stop words are eliminated from indexing as either primary or co-terms. Such full-stop words are eliminated because they have in themselves little or no retrieval value, and are generally useless in either the formation or conduct of a search, e.g., of, and, before, each. A list of full-stop words appears immediately preceding the PSI section.

Semi-Stop Words. Semi-stop words are eliminated as primary terms, but retained as co-terms. In general, semi-stop words are those which in formulation or conduct of a search take on useful retrieval value only in association with a more specific term. For example, CHANGES is a semi-stop word. If interested in such a subject as changes of personality, the searcher should look under the primary term PERSONALITY to find entries of the co-term, CHANGES. A list of semi-stop words appears immediately preceding the PSI section.

Word Phrases. It has been noted that certain frequently used word phrases would be more useful as indexing terms in PSI if the component words were kept together rather than allowed to permute separately. This considerably reduces look-up time during searches where more than two coordinations are required. Examples of such word phrases are GUINEA-PIG, ANOREXIA-NERVOSA, NEW-YORK, ANALOG-COMPUTER. When necessary a cross-reference has been provided to lead the user from the second word of the word phrase to the word phrase (COMPUTER sa ANALOG-COMPUTER). In other cases, where the usage of a fused word is substantial, hyphenated words have been changed to fused words, (VIET-NAM to VIETNAM).

Variant Spellings. British or other spelling variants of the same word have been replaced by their American forms, thus avoiding ''double lookups'' under terms such as tumor and tumour, aluminum and aluminium, cecum and caecum, etc.

Cross References. In order to help the user identify synonyms and spelling variations, hundreds of SEE and SEE ALSO cross-references have been added to PSI; for example: FOETAL see FETAL, BEHAVIOUR see BEHAVIOR, COLOUR see COLOR. Considering the dynamic quality of natural language as reflected in PSI, it is impossible to provide cross references for all possible synonyms. The user must always be mindful of the variety of scientific vocabulary and the need to search for related terms, in particular, terms with the same root but different endings, which usually appear close together in PSI.

Authors' Names. The last name and the initials of the appropriate author stand opposite the co-term. Ditto marks are used in place of the author's name when it appears successively. Authors' last names are limited to 8 characters. When a last name exceeds 8 characters, it is truncated and a period appears in the ninth position. Thus, EISENHOW. would appear as the truncated form of EISENHOWER.

Anonymous Entries. A black box (■) at the end of a PSI column line indicates that the title words come from an anonymous source item and a journal title abbreviation appears instead of an author name. The complete bibliographic description of the anonymous source item is indexed by journal title abbreviation in the Anonymous section of the SSCI ® Source Index.

Critical reviews. In PSI entries, a ''+'' sign appearing after the author's name indicates that the source item is a critical review. The complete Source Index entry for these source items includes a source item code indicating the type of critical review—a book review, database review, hardware review, or software review. A complete description of all source item codes appears in the Conventions section of the instructional material.

Unique Article Indicator. To facilitate searches in which the user wishes to identify every unique article indexed under a primary term, a solid arrowhead appears in front of authors' names the first time they appear under that primary term. By looking up only authors' names indicated by the arrowhead the user will identify all articles in whose titles the primary term appeared while avoiding repetitive examination of the same title.

Co-Term Unification. It frequently happens that an author will publish two or more papers on the same subject. Their titles, therefore, are likely to include many of the same words, which, in construction of the PSI, will result in identical primary/co-term pairs. Rather than repeat the co-term and author's name under the primary term in such cases, the duplicate co-terms and names are dropped. An at sign (@) follows the author's name in such cases to alert the user to the fact that he should look for more than one article on the same subject material by that author in the Source Index.

Permuterm® Subject Index

To find articles on a specific topic:

1. Locate any one of the words (Primary Terms) that describes the topic. If you want every unique title that includes that primary term, select only the articles marked with an arrow (◗). This eliminates repetitive examination of the same title.
2. To narrow selection, use any of the other words (Co-Terms) listed below that Primary Term. When using co-terms always disregard arrows.
3. Using authors' names consult the Source Index for the full titles and bibliographic data.

The Citation Index as a Search Tool

By
Eugene Garfield, President
Institute for Scientific Information, Inc.®

The introduction of SCI® in 1964 was the first large-scale attempt to apply the citation-indexing concept to the problem of searching the scientific literature. Unfamiliar and unconventional as SCI was in terms of its organization and search methodology, it established itself rather quickly as an important literature-retrieval tool: librarians and scientists found that it identified a high percentage of the material published on a given subject and that a high percentage of what it identified was pertinent.

While many factors account for the rapid adoption of SCI, the most significant is the Citation Index and its use of reference citations as indexing terms. That single feature gives a citation index three unique functional characteristics that have a significant impact on search productivity and efficiency (see Chapter One). The first is a subject categorization of published material that is, semantically, both more precise and detailed. It is also semantically more stable and flexible than conventional subject indexing.

The other two characteristics are a matter of perspective. Citation indexing goes beyond the function of categorizing the literature. It explicitly reveals the intellectual relationships that exist between old and new literature. Each article is a published record of a particular event in the process of scientific development. The citation index shows the relationships between individual events at different points in time. That makes a citation index particularly effective in telling us what has happened to some idea or experiment—whether it has been confirmed, extended, improved, tried, or corrected.

The third characteristic stems from the second. The citation index focuses our attention on the relationships between scientific events. These relationships can, and frequently do identify the otherwise hidden linkages between events that make up what we call disciplines and specialties. Thus citation indexing inherently classifies the literature it covers.

The two characteristics of perspective, plus the semantically different and often superior method of categorizing material make the literature covered by a citation index highly accessible. Indeed, as the literature coverage becomes more comprehensive and multidisciplinary, the citation index becomes increasingly useful.

SAMPLE SEARCHES

In the absence of any truly definitive test of the search performance of a citation index, the best way of demonstrating its utility is by showing what some typical searches require in effort and produce in results (1–3). The following discussion does that, with a series of 10 sample searches conducted in SCI®. Where appropriate, diagrams are used to show the search graphically (4). Each of the numbers in the diagrams represents a single paper, which may be either a reference citation (used as an indexing term to identify relevant papers), a source citation (identified as having cited a particular paper), or both (once a paper has been identified and judged, by the user, to be relevant, it can be used as a reference citation to extend the search). The arrows indicate the direction of the search from citation to citation. The dots represent a connection between the horizontal and vertical lines linking two citations. The year shown to the right of each citation is the year of publication; in the case of source citations, that year usually corresponds to the SCI edition in which the paper was identified, except for those instances when the journal issue involved was published too late to include in the proper edition. The citations listed beside the diagram are the Source Index descriptions of papers initially identified in the Citation Index lookup.

Bibliographic-Verification Search

Probably the most common type of search is the one concerned with citation verification. It may be a document that is cited in a manuscript being prepared for publication. Or it may be a paper that has been requested on an interlibrary loan. Verification is a major function in every scientific library. This type of search is limited when compared to the scope of the usual literature search. The objective is simply to find a known document. All that is required is to make sure that the document actually exists and to get an accurate, complete bibliographic description of it.

To see how a citation index performs on this kind of search, consider a librarian who has been asked to fill in a reference for a researcher writing a review paper on radioimmunoassays of estradiols, a class of hormonal steroids. The only information supplied is that the reference is to an article by G. E. Abraham in the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology. The researcher remembers neither the article title nor the year it was published.

The librarian's first job is to make sure the researcher's memory is accurate—that such a paper actually does exist. This is done by looking in the Citation Index of the 1975 edition of SCI under the name of Abraham, G. E. It identifies a sizable number of papers published by G. E. Abraham that were cited during 1975. Seven of them were published in the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology.

The next step in the search is to obtain the full citations of the seven from the Source Index of the SCI® editions involved (1969, 1971, 1972, and 1973). As shown in the sample that follows, those citations explicitly tell the librarian, by their titles, that the first six papers deal with radioimmunoassay work. The seventh may or may not, since the measurement technique is not identified in the title. Two of the six (#1 and #2) also specifically identify estradiol compounds in their titles, so one of them is likely to be the paper that the researcher wants to verify. Paper #7 also is a possibility, because estradiol may be one of the classes of steroids measured. The librarian probably would send the researcher all three citations. One almost certainly would be the missing reference; either, or both, of the other two might be useful additional references that the researcher will want to include.

This search illustrates an important characteristic of SCI®. Any annual edition contains, in the Source Index, a sizeable percentage of the significant papers published that year. But the Citation Index will contain a large percentage of the significant papers published in previous years. If one accepts the premise that a paper of even minor significance is cited at least once in 10 years, a 10-year span of SCI, two five-year cumulations, contains the citations of literally all the significant scientific literature that is known to exist. A single five-year cumulative edition of SCI®, covering 1965–1969, contains approximately 6.4 million reference citations. A study conducted by Williams and Ping (5) showed that this was a large-enough percentage of the significant literature to include every one of almost 300 biomedical papers that were chosen at random for verification.

Eponymic Search

An eponymic search is one that involves information on a subject that is named for a person. The practice is quite common in physics, astronomy, chemistry, and, of course, in medicine. Diseases are frequently named for the people who initially discovered or defined them. Hodgkins disease and Bell's palsy are two examples. The problem with searching a subject given an eponymic name is that the name may not be accepted universally as an indexing term. In that case, material on the subject would be identified by generic terminology. Exactly what that terminology may be is something the researcher must determine, usually by trial and error. A citation index frequently enables a researcher to avoid this type of guessing exercise. All he does is use the citation of the primordial paper associated with the eponymic name as a search term. If the paper is not so fundamental that the practice of formal citation has been obliterated, the search generally identifies one or more relevant papers in a single lookup.

For example, consider a researcher doing studies on electro-osmosis. He wants to find out if, and what, work relevant to his own has been done with the Donnan equilibrium theory. The theory predicts the speed and rate at which ions migrate through a permeable membrane. Figure 5.1 shows what is involved in a citation search to answer that question. Using the original paper in which Donnan describes his theory (#1 in Figure 5.1) for a search of the Citation Index of the 1973 SCI®, the researcher finds the 10 citing papers listed in Figure 5.1 (#2 through #11). Two of them, the papers by Alekseev (#2) and Tamamush (#8) are of obvious interest, just on the strength of their titles. The other eight may or may not be useful; the researcher would have to read them to fine out. If there was any need to continue the search, 53 references cited in the two relevant papers could be used as starting points for additional citation searches.

Methodology Search

Searches for information on methodological techniques have always been difficult in conventional subject indexes. Conventional indexing is based on the "main" theme of an article. The methods used are considered secondary to the "main" theme. On the other hand, authors frequently cite the original papers for the methods they use. This practice, saves authors the trouble of writing detailed explanations of their methods. Consequently a citation index is particularly effective for methodology searches.

Figure 5.2 shows a typical citation search for methodological information. A hypothetical example involves a researcher who is having trouble with the Barland method for isolating surface membranes from tissue-cultured cells. He turns to the literature to find out if his unsatisfactory results are typical or are the result of his applying the technique incorrectly. He looks up the Barland paper (#1 in Figure 5.2) in the Citation Index of the 1974 SCI. This identifies two papers whose titles are found in the Source Index. They describe the use of the method in two different applications. Presumably, they will give the researcher some useful information about what results to expect from the method, details about its application, or modifications that can make the method more effective.

Follow-up Searches

The objective of many literature searches, particularly in the chemical and chemical-processing areas is to follow up an earlier development. Figure 5.3 shows a typical citation search to find out what has been learned about a reaction that involves the metal-hydride reduction of endodicyclopentadienone since it was initially described. The starting point in the search is the citation for the original paper, published in 1970, by W. L. Dilling (#1 in Figure 5.3). The Citation Index of the 1974 SCI® identifies four papers under the reference citation. Their titles show that two of them (#3 and #5) describe the metal reduction of the same, or similar, compound as in the Dilling paper, so it can be assumed that they will be relevant. The other two papers (#2 and #4) would have to be read to determine their relevance.

More extensive and complex is the example, shown in Figure 5.4, of a search to see what follow-up work has been done on a compound, trimethoprim, since it was announced. The search starts in the 1965 SCI on the citation for the 1962 announcement paper (#1 in Figure 5.4) and covers a span of nine years. Paper #1 identifies papers #2, #3, #4, #7, #8, #9, #12, #13, #14, and #16 in the 1965–1974 editions of

SCI®. When the search is continued on paper #2 in the 1966–1974 editions of SCI, papers #7, #9, and #13 are identified a second time, and three new papers (#5, #10, and #15) are discovered. Searches on papers #3 and #4 during the years 1969 through 1974 produce nothing of interest. A search on paper #5 during the years 1969 through 1974 identifies papers #8, #9, #12, #13, #14, #15, and #16 again and uncovers paper #6 for the first time. Papers #6 and #7 lead to nothing in a search of the years 1970 through 1974. A search on paper #8 during the years 1969 through 1974 identifies #9 and #10 again and #11 for the first time. Papers #9 through #15 produce no new additions to the bibliography when they are used as search points for the years 1969 through 1974. So the search trail ends, though new ones could be started with likely references selected from any of the papers obtained.

The search results consist of a bibliography of 15 papers. They trace the development of trimethoprim through the typical pharmaceutical stages of defining the

Concept Search

Figure 5.5 is a typical citation search for information on a concept. Such a search, when possible at all by traditional methods, may require numerous lookups. The variety and changes of terminology in most concepts can be quite tricky. The concept in this example is the use of Kerr geometry to describe the astronomical phenomenon of black holes. The researcher is presumed to know nothing more about the subject of black holes than what he had read in a short paper by J. M. Bardeen that was published in Nature in 1970. He is interested in identifying the general literature on black holes, but he is especially interested in the use of Kerr geometry to study the phenomenon. Starting with the only paper he knows, the Bardeen paper (#1 in Figure 5.5), he conducts a simple citation search in the 1974 SCI®. The Citation Index section identifies eight papers, six of which (#3, #4, #5, #7, #8, and #9), from their descriptions in the Source Index, seem to be relevant. The other two (#2 and #6) are at least on related subjects. Since they cite the Bardeen paper, they probably will be useful. Three of the papers (#3, #5, and #6) contain a total of 241 references. These are likely to cover a significant portion, if not all of the literature on both black holes and the role of Kerr geometry in defining them.

Specific Question Search

Searches concerned with answering a specific question usually require sifting through a lot of material. It can be very time-consuming to identify those papers that deal specifically with the question. Figure 5.6 show how a citation index performs on this kind of problem. The question is whether Rae's theory predicting the existence of repetitive DNA sequences has been confirmed. The search is conducted in the 1973 Citation Index of SCI®. The citation for Rae's original paper (#1 in Figure 5.6) is the starting point. Fifteen papers are identified as having cited the Rae paper. Five of them (#3, #8, #10, #12, and #15) have titles that indicate that they are describing repetitive DNA sequences in one type of organism or another. Thus the question is answered, without even consulting the papers themselves.

MultiDisciplinary Search

There are two different types of multidisciplinary searches. The most common is when the search is expected to cover more than one discipline, which usually requires more than one discipline-oriented index. How that kind of search can be handled by a single, multidisciplinary citation index is shown in Figure 5.7.

In this example, a manufacturer of chemical additives that are used for the cryogenic storage of biological material is interested in some basic market research. Specifically, he wants to know if his products are being applied more broadly than expected. He also asks how well they are performing in biological and agricultural applications. The citation search conducted to answer these questions starts with a single, known paper by H. T. Meryman (#1 in Figure 5.7) that was published in 1971. The 1974 SCI® Citation Index entry for that paper identifies the 11 citing papers listed in Figure 5.7. The papers identified were published in a fairly broad range of journals: Cryobiology, Journal of Surgical Research, Ukrainskii Biokhimicheskii Zhurnal, Journal of Membrane Biology, Surgery, Poultry Science, Applied Microbiology, and Transfusion. Moreover, the range of specialties from which the papers come is equally as broad: two are on bacterial storage, two on renal function and the preservation of kidneys, one on mitochondria, three on the preservation and storage of red blood cells, two on the performance of cryoprotective agents, and one on the preservation of sperm.

Finding the same diverse range of papers in conventional indexes would have required separate searches under two or three main subject headings in at least two, and most likely three, separate indexes. In addition, the selection of appropriate subject headings for each of the searches would have called for a thorough understanding of the linguistic structure of each index. A fair estimate of the time needed to conduct such a search in conventional indexes is three hours. The citation search shown in Figure 5.7 took 20 minutes.

The second kind of multidisciplinary search is one that is focused on the literature of a single discipline or specialty, but that turns out to uncover something useful from outside that literature. This type of search, of course, is unique to a multidisciplinary citation index.

Figure 5.8 is an example of such a search. It might be conducted by a plant geneticist writing a state-of-the-art review of plant hybridization. One of the references he collects is to a 1972 paper by P. S. Carlson on interspecific hybridization, which usually cannot be achieved by conventional sexual methods of reproduction. Using the citation of that paper (#1 in Figure 5.8) as a search term in the 1974 SCI® Citation Index, the researcher finds 42 papers. Six of them (#12, #20, #23, #24, #25, and #41) have titles that indicate they are on the subject of the genetic fusion of different species. The titles of another seven (#2, #7, #8, #14, #29, #36, and #43) imply that they may deal with the same subject. The remaining 29 papers appear to deal mostly with the techniques of separation, fusion, and regeneration that would have to be perfected before interspecific plant hybrids can actually be created. In reading the papers, he finds that the work has its origins in the viral immunology research being done in molecular biology, a specialty that, until this development, had little to do with applied plant genetics.

Quick State-of-the-Art Search

Sometimes an exhaustive view of the literature is unnecessary; all that is needed is a quick review of the state of the art. Figure 5.9 shows a search, on the subject of hemoglobin binding, whose object is to identify papers that can provide a fast overview of the subject. The arbitrary criterion set for such papers is that they have more than 30 references. The starting point for the search is a paper by C. H. De Verdier (#1 in Figure 5.9) from the researcher's reprint file. The 1973 SCI® Citation Index identified nine papers on the subject. Five of them (#2, #4, #7, #9, and #10) are shown (see squares in Figure 5.9) to have more than 30 references. Their titles indicate that they are all relevant to the subject of the search. One of the five (#7) is identified as a formal review paper (see circle in Figure 5.9), and the others have enough references to make the researcher think they might be useful for review purposes.

Comprehensive Bibliography Search

The most exhaustive type of search is the one conducted to develop a comprehensive bibliography, which should provide a definitive look at the literature of a given subject. Normally, this type of search calls for the use of several indexes to achieve the degree of thoroughness required.

Figure 5.10 shows the first two cycles of a citation search to produce a bibliography on the subject of serum measurements of iron and ferritin and their roles in diagnosing pathological conditions. The search begins in the 1974 SCI Citation Index, with the citation of a paper written in 1965 by D. S. Young for the Journal of Clinical Pathology on a method for measuring serum iron. Eighteen papers are shown to have cited the Young paper. Nine of them (#3, #4, #5, #6, #11, #12, #13, #14, #18) appear from their titles to be relevant. In addition, each of them also provides, in its bibliography, reference citations on which the search can be continued through additional cycles.

For example, the paper by D. A. Lipschitz (#12) contains in its bibliography a reference to a paper by K. R. Reissman (#20). When the search continues on the citation for that paper, the 1974 Citation Index identifies five more papers (#21 through #25), three of which (#23, #24, and #25) have titles that indicate they are relevant.

The search can be continued in this way through as many cycles as is needed to produce a definitive bibliography. Though the example is limited to searches of only the 1974 SCI®, every citation used to search the literature of that year can be used to search the literature of the preceding years. You can go back as far as the oldest publication year involved—at least until 1961, when SCI starts. Such multiyear, cycling would produce a comprehensive bibliography of all the significant papers on the subject.

MACHINE SEARCHES

As with all other types of indexes, citation indexes can be searched by machine. Numerous organizations, including national and multinational information utilities, make the SCI and SSCI® data bases available for this purpose. The advantage of machine searches is that the searcher is required only to supply the search instructions; the computer performs the lookups and prints out the results. This can be a very significant advantage on extensive searches, such as in the last example.

The strategy in machine searches is basically the same as in manual searches. Starting with a target document, the search identifies every paper that has cited the document. There are some variations on this approach in which the search is conducted on a set of target documents. One variation, developed by Schiminovich (6) for classifying a data base, but used successfully by Bichteler and Parsons (7) for retrieval, uses the bibliography of a paper considered representative of the subject of interest as the set of target documents. In another variation, Bichteler and Eaton substitute a custom-designed set of target documents (8) for an existing bibliography. They also rank the retrieved papers by the number of citations they have in common with the target set.

Many of the organizations that use the SCI and SSCI data bases for machine searches have extended their utility beyond retrospective search into the area of current awareness. The SCI, in fact, was the basis for the first commercially available selective-dissemination-of-information (SDI) service for monitoring the current literature on a personalized basis. Called ASCA® (9), an acronym for Automatic Subject Citation Alert, this service searches each weekly addition to the SCI data base for papers that match the interests of subscribers. Subscriber interests are specified in what are called "profiles." ASCA profiles include both source- and reference-type search terms. One may wish to be informed as to what is being published in given journals, or one may want to know what a given organization or author is publishing. The search can also involve screening article titles for specific subject terms, word phrases, or word stems. In addition to these source-type questions, that is, questions based on the citing work, one can search for material that cites given authors or published works. Thus, ASCA profiles can include cited-author, cited-book, cited-journal, or cited-article search terms. The ability to identify material by these citation linkages is an important and unique feature of the service (10). In fact, it has been so useful as a technique for monitoring the literature that a majority of the research organizations and libraries that use the weekly SCI computer tapes do so much more often for current-awareness purposes than for retrospective searches.

How to Use the Social Sciences Citation Index® (SSCI®)

by Eugene Garfield, Ph.D., Chairman and President
Institute for Scientific Information, Inc.®

Reprinted from: Current Contents® (27):3-11, 2 July 1984

Most readers of Current Contents® are research scientists in the life and physical sciences. A significant number are interested in the social or behavioral sciences. In addition, there is an important group of readers who work directly in the social sciences. Some day we hope to demonstrate by detailed "connectivity" studies how important the social sciences are in the conduct not only of research in biomedicine, but also in providing answers to important policy issues in the physical sciences.

Several of our journal citation studies have uncovered links between the social and natural sciences. For example, an analysis of citation patterns in anthropology journals revealed a close relationship between anthropology and human anatomy, biology, genetics, and dentistry.[1] In the early days, Science Citation Index® (SCI®) covered fields—like psychology—at the border between the social and natural sciences. However, when we created a separate file called Social Sciences Citation Index (SSCI),[2] the majority of journals in these borderline fields were assigned to either SCI or SSCI. Although psychology journals were assigned to SSCI, SCI still covers those major journals in this and other borderline fields.

My first paper on the need for a citation index in the social and behavioral sciences was published in 1964.[3] It wasn't until 1973 that ISI® launched SSCI to meet that need.[2] However, we eventually extended SSCI coverage back to 1966. These and subsequent annual volumes now provide coverage of two million journal articles, books, and book chapters from 1966 to 1983 and the 20 million references they cited. We also plan to publish an 11-year cumulation for SSCI covering 1955-1965 to match its chronological coverage with the 1955-1964 SCI cumulation we recently published.[4]

Since their inception, both SCI and SSCI were recognized by information scientists and sociologists as important tools to help study the history, evolution, and sociology of science. Some of these potential uses were forecast as early as 1955.[5] Although the sociometric and other nonbibliographic uses of citation indexes may one day exceed their use for information retrieval, the primary purpose of SCI, SSCI, and Arts & Humanities Citation Index® (A&HCI®) is to help you search the literature. As I stressed recently, there is a continuing need to educate scholars in these uses.[6]

The basic function of any well-designed index ought to be readily self-evident. But there are numerous strategies for searching which can turn the index into an active and dynamic research tool. While I have recently reviewed these strategies for SCI,[6] it is equally important to review these methods as they apply to the social sciences.

For those of you who prefer a briefer review, turn to the summary table entitled "How to use the Social Sciences Citation Index (SSCI)" at the end of this essay.

Before discussing details, let me point out some of the differences between SSCI and conventional subject indexes. In the traditional indexing or cataloging process, indexers or bibliographers assign subject headings or terms to articles to facilitate their retrieval. These indexes depend upon the expertise and consistency of the indexers involved. Editors also attempt to control the vocabulary used for indexing, and terms tend to be general rather than specific. In general, economic as well as intellectual considerations limit the number of terms that can be used to index individual papers.

In SSCI there are several approaches to subject analysis. In the Permuterm® Subject Index (PSI), every significant title word or phrase is indexed. And in the Citation Index section, each cited reference becomes a symbolic representation for the "subject" of the item cited. Thus, you can retrieve citing articles independent of their titles by using any one of the references they cited instead.

Conventional scholarly indexes also focus on the literature of one field or discipline—history, psychology, sociology, etc. But SSCI is *multi*disciplinary, covering about 1,400 journals in more than 25 major fields of the social and behavioral sciences (see Table 1). In addition, SSCI® selectively covers articles relevant to the social sciences from about 3,100 journals in the natural and physical sciences which are fully covered in SCI. This selection procedure is done automatically by computer, and is based on citation patterns of the articles in these selectively covered journals. Most scholars would agree that the divisions between the social science disciplines are arbitrary. Yet SSCI is one of the few information retrieval tools that is truly multidisciplinary.

Conventional discipline-oriented indexes are also quite selective in what they choose to index even for the most important journals. If you can't find an article on a given topic, you can't be sure whether it doesn't exist or simply wasn't selected. SSCI indexes every significant item a journal publishes—articles, literature reviews, book reviews, editorials, letters, meeting reports, correction notes, discussions, etc. If you are trying to verify a reference and can't find it in SSCI, you can be sure that it has not been published in one of the journals SSCI indexes.

Also, conventional indexes give access to only one year of published literature. That is, they do not provide cross-references to relevant publications that appeared before or after the particular annual index you are searching. By indexing reference citations, SSCI breaks the "time barrier." Whatever particular volume you use, SSCI enables you to move forward or backward in time to identify literature relevant to your topic.

For example, let's assume you are interested in one or more authors who have published articles of interest to you. They can be located in either the Source Index or Citation Index sections of SSCI. The Source Index corresponds to the traditional author index. All authors who published articles during the indexing period are arranged alphabetically in the Source Index. Full bibliographic descriptions of their articles are given. In addition, all references cited in the article are listed with the source article. This allows you to identify previously published sources that the author found useful to the research he or she addressed. Many of these cited publications should also be relevant to you. I should point out that A&HCI® also lists cited references with each indexed source item. This unique feature of SSCI and A&HCI is not provided in SCI® strictly for space considerations. In the online version of SSCI, this feature is retained and is sometimes called the "citation abstract." You can learn a great deal about an article by examining the list of papers and books it cited.

You can also locate the authors you are looking for in the Citation Index section of SSCI. The first author of each cited item is listed alphabetically here. Under that author's name is a separate line for every paper or book that was cited. This is arranged in chronological order, as in SCI. However, in A&HCI, cited works are listed alphabetically. Full bibliographic information on these current sources is obtained by referring to the Source Index.

Of course, you may not be familiar with specific authors who are working on a particular subject. In that case, you can identify them through PSI. In this keyword index, every significant word or phrase in each article title is paired with all others in the same title. The first term of each main entry is printed in boldface in PSI. Directly under that word is listed every other word that was paired with it, in alphabetic order. The first authors of papers that used these words in their titles follow.

This general introduction summarizes the three basic uses of SSCI® in retrieving information. We'll now illustrate each of these with several searches to demonstrate the simplicity of the system.

Suppose you are interested in self-efficacy theories. This subject is part of psychology that deals with people's perceptions of their own capabilities and how these perceptions affect their behaviors and emotions when confronted with a task. For example, if you aren't confident about your driving ability you may feel overly anxious about hazardous road conditions such as rain or snow. Or, you may avoid demanding traffic situations or winding mountain roads. On the other hand, overconfident drivers take unnecessary risks they can't handle, such as passing cars on blind curves.

It is possible that you know that a prominent researcher in this field is Albert Bandura. You might even recall or have a reprint of his paper, "Gauging the relationship between self-efficacy judgement and action," published in 1980 in Cognitive Therapy and Research. You ask yourself, "What has happened since that paper was published? Has he or anyone else done any further work?"

To quickly answer these questions, you simply turn to the Citation Index section of SSCI and look under "Bandura A." Using the latest index available, it is easy to determine that this paper was cited in five articles in 1983, shown in Figure 1. These five current citing papers, involving over a half dozen authors, have commented on Bandura's 1980 article and they will probably add to your knowledge of self-efficacy theories. Of course, you could do the same search for the many other articles Bandura has published on this and other subjects. For example, Bandura's 1981 paper in Journal of Personality and Social Psychology has been cited by him and others in papers they published in 1983. The illustration in Figure 1 is an abridged sample of Bandura's cited works. In fact, the 1983 SSCI Citation Index includes six columns on his cited publications.

Figure 1: Sample entry from 1983 SSCI® Citation Index. The cit*ed* author is Albert Bandura. Listed beneath his name in chronological order are the papers cited in 1983. Beneath each cited paper follows the condensed citation for each cit*ing* paper. Under the entry, "80 COGNITIVE THERAPY RE 4 263" are five papers that cited Bandura's 1980 article, "Gauging the relationship between self-efficacy judgement and action." Indicated to the right of each citing author's name is the journal title, volume, first page, and year.

Figure 2 gives complete bibliographic data for each of the five papers that cited Bandura's 1980 article in Cognitive Therapy and Research, including the title, author, journal, etc. They were obtained from the Source Index of the 1983 SSCI annual. As you can see, the Source Index lists all the references each of these papers cited. Many of these citing publications deal directly with various aspects of the theory of self-efficacy, while others support points made in Bandura's article. Thus, in a simple two-step procedure involving the Citation Index and Source Index you now have a current bibliography of five relevant publications related to self-efficacy theory. Through the references these authors have cited, you could identify several dozen earlier papers.

Figure 2: 1983 SSCI® Source Index entries for authors citing Bandura's 1980 paper, "Gauging the relationship between self-efficacy judgement and action," Cognitive Therapy and Research. The cited paper is indicated by boxes.

If you are not familiar with this literature or the subject, you will not be aware of Bandura or any other author in the field. In that case, you would choose the appropriate keyword or phrase to start your search with PSI. In Figure 3, the entries for the term "self-efficacy" in the 1983 PSI are shown. This term has been used in combination with many other keywords. In fact you can see an entry for Bandura under each of the terms "determinants," "fears," "calamities," etc. When you turn to the Source Index, you find his 1983 papers that used these words in their titles.

The arrowheads in the column preceding the author entry in Figure 3 are used to limit your scanning if you want to identify all the articles that use self-efficacy in their titles. By checking only those authors with this symbol you can avoid repetitive look-ups of the same article or author. The arrowhead quickly tells you the number of unique first authors who have published articles on self-efficacy. Twenty-three first authors discussed various aspects of self-efficacy theory in the 1983 SSCI®. Two of them—D.H. Schunk and J. Barling—wrote more than one article using the same primary and co-terms listed in PSI. They are indicated by an "@" sign.

Incidentally, had you looked up these 23 authors, you would have also found an additional group of 26 coauthors in the Source Index, all of whom are cross-referenced to the first authors. While the Source Index supports the other sections of SSCI®, its main purpose is to help you determine what an author has published. This allows you to track the work of a specific author over time. By using the Source Indexes for the last 20 years, you can follow the publication history of that individual. While Bandura has published many earlier papers, which can best be identified using the five-year cumulations, Figure 4 shows that in 1983 he published two articles on self-efficacy, one of which he coauthored with D. Cervone. Bandura also wrote two shorter pieces, an editorial in the Journal of Japanese Psychological Research and a "short" note in Psychological Review.

I should point out that full bibliographic data for an article in the Source Index are listed only under the entry for the first author. However, a cross-reference is provided for every coauthor. Thus, if you remember having seen an article on self-efficacy by Cervone, the Source Index would direct you to look under "Bandura A" for complete information. This is illustrated in Figure 5.

These cross-references serve a useful purpose in helping you to verify partially remembered citations. This function is crucial because it is extremely important to supply an accurate and complete set of references when you submit a manuscript for publication. Even if you don't remember in what year a particular paper was published, you can use the five-year cumulations of SSCI to scan the complete lists of papers for an author. If it was published from 1966 onward, you can find it in SSCI.

If you are so inclined, you can also use the Citation Index to identify papers published even more than 20 years ago. As long as the paper or book in question has been cited even once from 1966 to 1983, a condensed citation for it will appear in the Citation Index of SSCI. To obtain full bibliographic data you can go to the library and retrieve any of the current publications that have cited it and look in their reference lists.

You can also use the Citation Index of any annual or cumulated SSCI edition to compile a partial bibliography of an author's works. This list will usually include the author's most influential papers or books, as shown in Figure 1.

Indexes are not always used to do comprehensive searches. Very often we simply want to retrieve a partially remembered citation. As long as you can recall part of the title, you can use PSI for those keywords. Once you recognize the author's name, you can confirm you have the right paper by examining its title in the Source Index. You can then either check your reprint collection or the journal itself in your library if you are still unsure that this is indeed the right paper.

The Corporate Index section of SSCI is still another option for identifying authors and their publications. It is arranged by country and city, and subdivided by organization and department. Under the department heading are listed all papers published by members of that department. A condensed citation for each article is provided. Figure 6 shows that Bandura is listed under the Department of Psychology, Stanford University, Stanford, California. The Source Index will give you full bibliographic information for each of his papers, as shown in Figure 4.

Figure 4: 1983 SSCI® Source Index entries for Bandura's 1983 papers. In addition to full bibliographic information, the Source Index indicates the number of references each article contained and provides condensed citations for each. The sample shows that Bandura published two articles, an editorial, and a note in 1983. "Self-efficacy determinants of anticipated fears and calamities" was published in Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, volume 45, issue 2, pages 464 through 469, 1983, and contained 34 references. The second article, coauthored with D. Cervone, "Self-evaluative and self-efficacy mechanisms governing the motivational effects of goal systems," was published in Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, volume 45, issue 5, pages 1017 through 1028, 1983, and contained 26 references. Bandura's affiliation and address are repeated beneath each of the entries.

You'll also notice in Figure 6 that each publication is coded by type—note, meeting, editorial, letter, etc. Original, substantive research articles are not coded simply because they are the most common type of publication indexed.

However, in the social sciences and humanities, book reviews are quite common. Indeed, SSCI is the only information retrieval service for the social sciences that indexes book reviews comprehensively. The reviewer is treated as an author in the Source Index. For example, Figure 6 indicates that C.N. Jacklin wrote a review in Contemporary Psychology of a book by J. Sayers. Figure 7a shows the Source Index entry for this review from the 1983 SSCI. In addition, the author of the book is listed in the Citation Index, as shown in Figure 7b.

Book reviews and the monographs and books they discuss are crucial forms of communication in the social and behavioral sciences. Critical reviews of these books and monographs are useful and important information sources for social scientists. From 1966 to Figure 6: 1983 SSCI® Corporate Index, geographic section. The main heading shows the name of the state. All subdivisions are alphabetized. Each city entry includes the name of each institution or departmental subdivision in which authors have published during the indexing period. In this sample, "California" is followed by "Stanford," beneath which is found "Stanford Univ," which includes "Dept Psychol." The list of papers published by this department follows. Only the first author of each paper is shown. Bandura's 1983 publications are indicated by the box.

date, SSCI® has indexed about 370,000 book reviews. This is in addition to the 330,000 book reviews indexed in A&HCI® from 1976 to date. For space and economic reasons, we do not index all book reviews in SCI®. But we do now include in SCI all book reviews appearing in Science and Nature. Unlike the social sciences, there is considerably less interest in book reviews in the sciences.[7]

This primer on how to use SSCI does not describe various other strategies for increasing the scope of a literature search, such as cycling. These methods are described in detail and fully illustrated in my book on citation indexing.[8] The annual SSCI Guide also includes detailed instructions and sample searches, as well as a complete list of journals covered. Our purpose here is limited to helping you use SSCI to find a few key current papers.

Figure 7a: 1983 SSCI® Source Index showing a sample entry for a book review. C.N. Jacklin is the reviewer of the book, Biological Politics—Feminist and Anti-Feminist Perspectives by J. Sayers. The book review was published in Contemporary Psychology, volume 28, issue 5, pages 388 through 389, 1983. The review cited two references, one of which is the book being reviewed (in box). Jacklin's affiliation and address are given beneath the entry.

Any undergraduate can be taught the basic purpose of SSCI® in minutes. Anyone who can use an alphabetic telephone directory can use either the Source Index to determine what an author has published or the Citation Index to find out where a particular work has been cited or quoted. If neither of these approaches is sufficient, you can do a keyword search in PSI.

SSCI is the print version of a computerized data base called Social SCISEARCH®. The data base can be accessed online through DIALOG, BRS, and DIMDI. You can also access these files by using our Sci-Mate® software—the Universal Online Searcher.[9] Once you've located a relevant record you can "download" it to your personal microcomputer.

Weekly updates of the social sciences literature can be obtained through ISI's Automatic Subject Citation Alert (ASCA®).[10] This selective dissemination of information service permits you to customize searches to suit your interests. You simply submit a profile of target authors, subjects, journal sets, institutions, etc., and ASCA automatically identifies all publications related to it. It is a simple "clipping service" that permits you to identify who is reviewing or citing your work, among other things. ASCA covers the totality of journals indexed in SSCI, SCI®, and A&HCI®.

The one-page summary entitled "How to use the SSCI" is provided for those who would like to introduce students to this information retrieval system. Copies of this summary can be made without permission. In addition, you can request a portfolio of sample searches from ISI.

How to Use the Social Sciences Citation Index® (SSCI®)

by Eugene Garfield, Ph.D., Chairman and President
Institute for Scientific Information, Inc.®

Appendix reprinted from: Current Contents® (27):12-13, 2 July 1984

The annual Social Sciences Citation Index (SSCI) fully indexes the contents of over 1,400 journals in the social and behavioral sciences, and selectively covers another 3,100 journals in the natural and physical sciences, which publish over 120,000 articles per year. SSCI is published in annual, five-year and ten-year cumulated editions.

Four basic indexes comprise the SSCI system.

Source Index. An alphabetic listing of all authors and all papers published during the period covered by the index. Full bibliographic information is provided, including authors, title, journal, volume, issue number, full pagination, year of publication, number of references cited, and address. In addition, condensed citations of all references included in the indexed article are also shown.

Citation Index. An alphabetic listing of first authors of cited papers, books, etc. Listed under each cited item is the condensed citation for each cit*ing* paper.

Permuterm® Subject Index (PSI). Uses words appearing in the titles of articles as indexing terms. All significant title words are permuted to create all possible pairs. Each pair then becomes a separate entry in PSI.

Corporate Index (In the annual and five-year cumulated editions only). Consists of two complementary parts. The geographic section is subdivided by country, city, institution, department, etc. The alphabetic organization section cross-references each institution with its geographic location.

The following examples from the 1983 SSCI illustrate how easy it is to use.

To find the most recent information relevant to M.M. Baltes's 1976 paper, "Reestablishing self-feeding in a nursing home resident," Nursing Research 25(1):24-26, turn to the Citation Index, shown in Figure A. Complete bibliographic information for each citing paper can be obtained from the Source Index.

If you know little about research on nursing homes, you can start your search in PSI. As shown in Figure B, a check under the main heading "nursing-home" reveals that the hyphenated term has been used together with many other terms. Among these co-terms are "accidents," "advocacy," "aging," "care," etc., followed in each case by the names of relevant authors. The Source Index provides full information on these authors's articles.

You can also check if a particular author has published anything during an indexing period by finding the name in the Source Index. For example, Figure C shows that in 1983 Baltes published two articles entitled, "On the social ecology of dependence and independence in elderly nursing-home residents—a replication and extension," and "The microecology of residents and staff-behavior mapping in a nursing-home." The former paper is in English, and the latter in German. Baltes also published a comment entitled "Cognitive performance deficits and hospitalization—learned helplessness, instrumental passivity, or what."

The Corporate Index identifies all papers published at a given institution. For example, Figure D shows that numerous departments are found following the entry "Free Univ Berlin" under the city heading "Berlin" that follows the main heading "Fed Rep Ger." One of these is the department with which Baltes is affiliated, "Dept Gerontopsychiat."

SSCI's multidisciplinary coverage and cross-referencing are its main advantages for students and scholars. Anatomy, nutrition, dentistry, and instrumentation may all be relevant to anthropology, for example. Conversely, citations in an anthropology article may reveal relationships to other fields.

A detailed schematic explanation of search techniques appears in the front matter of each SSCI edition. A complete Guide and Lists of Source Publications are also printed separately each year.
